Gay Republican members of Congress, a majority on Capitol Hill, are usually counted on to oppose and ridicule the Republicans who vote against marriage equality. New Jersey governor Chris Christie, who has floated being considered for president in 2016, also opposes marriage equality. But what is really the difference between these two kinds of Republicans? Not much, actually, and they share the same politics. The brand of anti-gay politics practiced by the right can be summed up by Robert P. Jones, the president of the Public Religion Research Institute. Last year, he conducted the first-ever study of the priorities of American Christians on a broad range of issues. He concluded that the largest denominations, by far, have a pro-life agenda, while the most conservative Christians are mostly against LGBT issues. And that, he said, is the one point of agreement, as evangelical Christians and Catholic bishops, Orthodox Jews and fundamentalist Muslims all support more anti-gay politics, more anti-abortion politics, more anti-Muslim politics and more anti-left politics. RUBBER IS THE NEW WORLD OUT You know it is coming, but you just can't resist the sheer excitement of it happening. The first race of the FIM Superbike World Championship resumes today at the Sachsenring. There's more than just one new point on offer, as the tyre manufacturer Schwalbe rolls out a new rubber on the sport's fastest circuit. It is a new start for the tyre manufacturer, who will contest the first race of the FIM Superbike World Championship in the new 'season' with a new tyre. Led by its CEO Dr. André Ziech, the 'Schwalbe' brand is starting out on a 'career path', we can only hope that a long and successful one. The new tyre, in particular, will have to prove its worth. And its first outing at a World Championship race is set to provide a lot of data. We are not talking about tyres that turn up in a vintage car manufacturer's showcase stable; the tyres used on a Superbike, and the Sch f678ea9f9e
